Considering we are supposed to be living in a “globalized” world, there are a stunning number of obstacles to the free circulation of people and cultural expression: visa restrictions, prohibitive costs, language barriers, different managerial structures. But all of these problems can be overcome when there is good faith, determination, and respect between international collaborators. In addition, seeing a culture outside of your own enlarges your mental map. It clarifies who you are—what part of you is defined by your home culture, and what part of you eclipses it. It opens your mind to the unfamiliar, the uncomfortable. It makes you perceive differently and think more elastically.

Tom Sellar, Professor in the Practice of Dramaturgy and Dramatic Criticism, Yale School of Drama

Exchanges become a bridge between us in which people who don't look the same or speak the same language can still walk towards each other.

Shamel Pitts, Choreographer and Dancer

Together we create something new.

Robert Wilson, Artistic Director, Watermill Center

Through international exchanges, people absorb different cultures, learn to understand the traditions of other countries, and expand their circles of communication.

Petr Sharov, Regional Director, Eastern Europe, Central Asia, Pure Earth

Art is the ideal way of communicating across cultures, across politics, and it leads the way to greater levels of empathy and human understanding.

Megha Ralapati, Residency Manager, Hyde Park Arts Center

International exchange is such a simple yet profoundly transformative idea. We learn so much from each other, so much about each other, and so much about ourselves. We're challenged and changed as individuals and as professionals. It's creative alchemy to just be together.

Lee Davis, Co-Director, Center for Social Design, Maryland Institute College of Art

In a world that seems to be ever more descending into crisis, the creativity, innovation, and imagination demanded of today's artists to contextualize that world can only be amplified by encounters with something new—whether that be new methodologies, environments, perspectives, information, or even that most rare commodity: new ideas.

Gabriel Stelian-Shanks, Artistic Director, The Drama League

International artists play a critical role in the ongoing process of building and developing a healthy society as well as fostering understanding and co-operation around the globe.

Simon Dove, Executive Director, CEC ArtsLink

The challenges facing everyone on a rapidly changing globe require people to come together, share expertise, and build understanding about each other and the solutions to shared problems.

Martin Robards, Regional Director, Arctic Beringia Program, Wildlife Conservation Society

International cultural exchanges are crucial to allow opportunities for thoughtful discussion about cultural, political, and social issues affecting participants globally. Bringing artists and cultural practitioners together across borders helps dissolve the perception of differences among us and provides necessary resources to catalyze change on a global level.

María Wethers, Director of International Initiatives, Global Practice Sharing program, Movement Research

The feeling of legitimacy and magic that working on an international project confers is a deeply meaningful experience.

Nat Roe, Executive Director, Flux Factory

Innovation is often hindered by a bounded universe of ideas. Large-scale conservation requires solutions across cultures, across geographies, and across political jurisdictions.

Deborah Davidson, Associate Director, Center for Large Landscape Conservation

Relationships built across the planet serve to drive out biases and prejudices and give a foundation for a better world.

Jon Waterhouse, Executive Director, Living Indigenous Network of Knowledge

Exchanges provide a critical opportunity for meaningful and free interaction, building personal resiliency, and serving as a catalyst for long-term political and cultural change.

Mariusz Wroblewski, Western Pacific Program Director, Wild Salmon Center

Many small gestures, rooted in kindness, help us see ourselves in one another.

Katie Carmer, Cisco & The Racecars

We meet, and we change each other.

Elizabeth McCormack, Trustee, Trust for Mutual Understanding

Exchanges build bridges, not just between people, but bridges of solidarity and common understanding.

Milan Šagát, Executive Director, Via Iuris

It is always important for artists and scholars to challenge themselves and their own assumptions about the world and the work they do in it.

Kara Walker, Artist

You can't change the world if you're only looking at your immediate surroundings or if you don't step out of your comfort zone and try to better understand the struggles, developments, and successes of other cultures.

Bori Fehér, Head of MOME EcoLab, Moholy-Nagy University of Art and Design Budapest
